Letter and a Lesson I om New Eng-FLORENCE, Mass., May 23, 1865.

EDS RURAL NEW YORKER: Thousands of your readers would like a view of New England, the fand to which they can trace back their ances try. I am just on the Western verge of the luvely valley of Connecticut The "Licking Water"-a swift, clear a ream-passes through the narrow valley, tu.ning the great factory the same manner and warrants, or can be held withwheels as it goes forming on. Eastward are the out care or rick for location at a future time hach necticut winds its quiet way south, the mountain ranges of Tom and Holyoke stretch east and west, their summits standing grandly against the sky. This is a factory village, one of the best in the land, in character as well as thrift Along the stream are a cotton mill, a daguerreo sik, which turns out daily over two thousand dollars worth. Just beyond the hill-top, northword, is a great shop, filled with beautiful maof the "Florence Sewing Machines"

"Here are pleasant streets, yards of rarest green. fine hedges, nest, and tasteful homes-intelligence as well as industry among these sixteen hundred people. In a grove of pines, looking down on the mills, is a nest church, and a noble school house, toward the building of which, a wisely generous man, Samuel Hall, paid thirty thousand dollars The school is free, the library and reading room is free to all, and a fine hall in a wing, is open for lectures and meetings. Toward the river, west, is Northampton, a beautifol old town, with broad streets, ample yards. quaint old homes, with massive frames, low ceilings, small windows. steep, moss grown roots. and great central chimneys. Often a noble old elm of a century's growth, spreads its sweeping branches over the roof. There are fine houses too, of modern style, and old and new are in good order, for there is culture, wealth and

The farm is near the work-hop, and I see that, not only in the rich meadows, but on the thin soil of the hill-, there is an increase of productiveness and a high saill and success. Here is no sending far off the enriching qualities from the soil All is kept here; gueno is imported too. Produce is high, and goods, made close by, are cheap. Here is work for all powers of band and brain, scope for inventive gentu-, growth in culture and intelligence, as well as in wealth for the many, in the fine result of this mingling of varied :

The lesson is plain enough. Encourage the growth of the same state of things elsewhere Let us have workshops and farms side by side in the West Let us keep our soil rich, our farmers prosperous and skilful, give scope to our varied powers, toster our own manufactures, and be a truly free, self-reliant people, burthened by no foreign work-hops, but opening our doors for artiz us from crowded Europe to come here that our great farms may feed them, and all gain surely and permanently.
